Acknowledgements

The editors would like to thank everyone who contributed to the creation of this book.

First, sincere gratitude is extended to all the authors whose dedication, expertise, and critical insights have been instrumental in shaping this book. Their rigorous analysis and unwavering commitment to highlighting the complexities of hospitality work have added immense depth and richness to this project. Each chapter reflects the passion of the Global Hospitality Research Alliance (GHRA) for advocating for fairness and dignity in the industry, and their hard work is deeply appreciated.

Gratitude is also extended to all the participants whose voices, stories, and lived experiences form the foundation of this book. By sharing their realities, they have enabled a deeper understanding of the challenges faced by those working in hospitality, giving this project a sense of urgency and authenticity. Without their openness and courage, this work would not have been possible.

This book is a collective effort, standing as a testament to the power of collaborative 'intellectual activism', and the importance of amplifying the voices of hospitality workers. It is hoped that this work contributes meaningfully to the ongoing conversation about ensuring fair and decent work for all.

About the authors

Professor Tom Baum is a Professor of Tourism Employment in the University of Strathclyde in Glasgow and Distinguished Visiting Professor in the School of Tourism and Hospitality, University of Johannesburg, South Africa. He is internationally recognized as a thought leader in the field of tourism work and employment, including workforce planning, recruitment, skills development, labour mobility and migration. He has taught internationally and written extensively in the area of human resource management and currently leads and teaches on the Leading Sustainable Organisations module for the Strathclyde MBA. He has worked in about 50 countries as researcher, teacher and consultant and has completed projects funded by key international agencies including COMCEC, the World Bank, ILO, UNICEF, UNWTO, UNDP, EU and ADB. Tom has supervised about 50 PhD students to completion and examined over 100 doctoral theses. He has published over 200 academic papers in scientific journals and is author/ editor of 12 books.

Dr Irma Booyens is a Senior Lecturer at the University of Strathclyde Business School, Department of Work, Employment and Organisation, in tourism sustainability, work and employment. Currently, she also holds a Senior Research Associate affiliation with the School of Tourism & Hospitality, University of Johannesburg. In 2015, she obtained a PhD in geography with a focus on tourism from the same institution. She has a multi-disciplinary background in both academic and policy research having worked at a research consultancy, a national social science research institute (in South Africa) and in academia/higher education. Her research interests include tourism work and employment issues; local and regional economic development; innovation for development and sustainability; tourism sustainability; and creative economies.

Ms Tayler Cunningham is a Lecturer and researcher at Glasgow Caledonian University. Though still early in her academic career, Her research to date has focused on the experiences of workers in low-paid employment, namely, hospitality work, service work more broadly in both the public and private sectors, and administrative roles. Tayler's key areas of research interest surround the sociology of work and uncovering the realities of employment within low-paid job roles. Tayler's current research projects centre around the theories and concepts of worker alienation, worker wellbeing and mental distress, the impact of new technologies on experiences of work, alongside a continuing focus on the experiences of hospitality workers with regards to their employment in Scotland.

Dr. Deirdre Curran is an employment relations academic at the University of Galway, Ireland. Her main area of expertise surrounds the employment relationship. She is a leading researcher on the lived experience of hospitality workers in Ireland, and her work has been instrumental in informing policy and practice, not least during the drafting of the Payment of Wages (Tips and Gratuities) Act 2022. Her research also informed the policy recommendations of a 2022 government report entitled 'Working Conditions and Skills Shortages in Ireland's Tourism and Hospitality Sector.' Dr Curran is a founder and steering committee member of the Global Hospitality Research Alliance [GHRA].

Dr. Anastasios Hadjisolomou is a Senior Lecturer in HRM and Employment studies at the University of Strathclyde, Scotland. His research interests include service employment, service triangle, customer misbehaviour, customer abuse, sexual harassment and violence in the workplace, (sexualized) aesthetic labour, LGBT+ issues in the workplace, employee voice and labour process theory. He co-led the formation of the Global Hospitality Research Alliance [GHRA]. His work has been published in journals such as the International Journal of Contemporary Hospitality Management, International Journal of Human Resource Management, Work, Employment and Society, Gender Work and Organization and Industrial Relations Journal.

Professor Candice Harris is a Professor of Management in the Faculty of Business, Economics and Law at Auckland University of Technology. Her research focuses on careers and employment, particularly in hospitality and tourism, using critical, qualitative, and some quantitative approaches. Her recent research with industry includes the 2024 report Hospitality and Tourism Employment: Rebound and Roads Forward for New Zealand's Ministry of Business, Innovation and Employment. She has held leadership roles such as Head of Department and Associate Dean Academic and teaches and supervises students eager to learn about Management, HRM, and Social Impacts. Candice serves on the Te Manahua NZUWIL Steering Group, is a qualified coach with executive education experience, and has received AUT's Vice Chancellor's Diversity Award for contributions to gender and diversity. From 2024, she co-chairs the CAUTHE Fellows and is a member of the Global Hospitality Research Alliance.

Professor Olga Gjerald is a Professor of Service Management at the Faculty of Social Sciences, University of Stavanger, Norway, and an Associate of the UNESCO Chair on Leadership, Innovation, and Anticipation. Her research explores the intersection of service employment, leadership, and service experience design. She serves as Co-Editor-in-Chief of the Journal of Change Management: Reframing Leadership and Organizational Practice and is a co-founder and steering board member of the Global Hospitality Research Alliance (GHRA).

Dr. Amairisa Kouki is an applied microeconomist specializing in labour economics at University of Sheffield. Her research examines the structural and social factors driving inequalities in the workforce, with a focus on gender, race, and other identity-based differences. She investigates barriers to equal pay, career advancement, and workforce participation, particularly in relation to discrimination, harassment, and workplace culture. Through her work, she aims to uncover the systemic challenges that might prevent access to opportunities in various professional fields. Her research also explores the intersection of flexible work policies and economic outcomes, considering how these dynamics can promote or hinder equality, diversity, and inclusion. She examines how workplace policies, leadership structures, and institutional norms contribute to disparities, with a focus on both immediate and long-term consequences. Additionally, she is interested in how individuals' perceptions, opportunities, and choices, particularly in education and professional settings, are influenced by both visible and less visible characteristics, shaping career trajectories and mobility.

Professor Adele Ladkin is Professor of Tourism Employment and Deputy Director of the International Centre for Tourism and Hospitality Research (ICTHR), Bournemouth University Business School. Her research expertise is tourism and hospitality workforce and employment, specifically labour mobility, fair work, employee wellbeing and digital transformations of work. She is an Associate Editor for the leading tourism journal, Annals of Tourism Research and was joint Editor-in-Chief for the International Journal of Tourism Research from 2003-2009 and the European Regional Editor for the International Journal of Contemporary Hospitality Management 2020-2023. She has extensive experience in developing tourism and hospitality international post-graduate studies, contributing to global capacity building in education. She collaborates with the UNWTO in education and human capital development for tourism and is motivated to undertake research to inform policy to drive positive change for employees and organisations.

Dr. Tone Therese Linge is an Associate Professor at NHS – Department of Leadership and Service Innovation, University of Stavanger. She holds a PhD from the University of Oslo, where she researched workplace communication and communication competence in multicultural hotel workplaces. Linge’s work explores communication and leadership in diverse service workplaces, emphasizing practical and theoretical perspectives. Her research interests include organizational and intercultural communication, workforce diversity and diversity management, service leadership, and employment relations. She has led the WITH (Work Inclusiveness in Tourism and Hospitality) research group and strategic program area at the NHS – Department of Leadership and Service Innovation for several years and is a member of the Global Hospitality Research Alliance (GHRA). She also worked eight years as an Executive Officer for Multicultural Affairs in Sandnes municipality, Norway, focusing on diversity and inclusion in local communities.

Dr. Fotios Mitsakis is a Senior Lecturer in Human Resource Management and Organisational Behaviour at Nottingham Business School. Before joining Nottingham Trent University, he completed his PhD in Human Resource Management at the University of Strathclyde, Glasgow. He also holds an MSc in Strategic Human Resource Management from ALBA Graduate Business School in Greece. His research interests include human resource development, strategic HRD, training and development, diversity training, and career development.

Dr. Shelagh Mooney is an Associate Professor at Auckland University of Technology. Shelagh’s research interests lie in building positive organisational cultures – recognising that the effects of intersecting aspects of employee and manager demographic identities influence wellbeing and retention at organisational and sectoral level. The lack of concrete methods to explore diversity dimensions facilitated Shelagh’s development of an innovative ‘nimble’ intersectional approach to track intersections of identity and their outcomes at individual, organisational and sectoral/national levels. Shelagh’s prior career as an international hotel executive enabled unique insights into the ways that personal characteristics such as gender, age, race, ethnicity and class influence individuals’ career progression. Recent studies and supervisions include the experiences of employees living with disability, working conditions and the mental health of chefs, women’s career experiences and the pervasive and tacit acceptance of sexual harassment as an industry norm. Currently, Shelagh is part of an international research team examining the application of a common good HRM approach to hospitality employment.

Mr Kyrie Eleison Muñoz is a sociologist by training and educator by trade. He is a PhD candidate and academic at the Business School and Centre for Policy Futures, University of Queensland, Australia. Over the past decade, he earned extensive experience teaching and training in different schools, universities, and organisations across the Asia-Pacific. He is also a labour rights activist and critical scholar, researching on the hospitality workforce, vocational education, and social policy using practice-based methods. He is currently the Media Editor of Tourism Management Perspectives and Associate Editor of the Journal of Philippine Tourism and Hospitality Studies. Kyle holds a bachelor's degree from the University of the Philippines, and an international master's from the National Kaohsiung University of Hospitality and Tourism, Taiwan ROC.

Dr Angela Teberga de Paula is a Professor at the Center of Excellence in Tourism at the University of Brasília (CET/UnB). She holds a PhD in Tourism and Hospitality at the University of Caxias do Sul (UCS), Master in Tourism at the University of Brasília (UnB) and Bachelor in Tourism at the Federal University of São Carlos (UFSCar). Angela has 13 years of experience in teaching at the higher education level in tourism and is leader of the Labor Movens - Research Group on Working Conditions in Tourism, Member of the Alliance on Training and Research in Social and Fair Tourism – ISTO (International Social Tourism Organisation) and researcher at Alba Sud (Barcelona/Spain). Angela works with the following topics: work in tourism, work in cruise ships, tourism and modern slavery, social tourism, social inclusion and tourism.

Professor Dennis Nickson works in the Department of Work, Employment and Organisation at the University of Strathclyde. His primary interests centre on work and employment issues in interactive service work, with a particular focus on the hospitality and retail industries. He is one of the team, along with Professor Chris Warhurst and the late Professor Anne Witz, who originated and developed the concept of aesthetic labour. His work has been published in journals such as Work, Employment and Society, Human Resource Management (US), the Human Resource Management Journal, the International Journal of Human Resource Management, Economic and Industrial Democracy, Gender, Work and Organisation and Journal of Business Ethics. Sole and co-authored books include Aesthetic Labour (Sage, 2020) and Human Resource Management for the Hospitality and Tourism Industries, 2nd edition (Routledge, 2013). He is also Editor in Chief of Employee Relations.

Dr Belinda Nwosu is a faculty member of the Organisational Behaviour and HRM Department at Lagos Business School. She holds a Doctorate in Business Administration from the University of Southampton, UK, with other degrees in hospitality and statistics. Her main research interests centre around human behaviour in business contexts with applications in the services sector, especially tourism and hospitality. She has explored gender, HR leadership, sustainable HRM and governance in tourism, employee work ethic, employee behaviour and service climate. She has several journal and book chapter publications, including the first comprehensive study on the issues facing human capital development in the hotel industry in Nigeria. Her teaching areas in the field of organisational behaviour include teamwork, conflict management, emotional intelligence, motivation, leadership development and change management

Dr. Olivier Oren is an Associate Lecturer and researcher at Griffith University and a member of the Griffith Institute for Tourism. His research examines how digital media reshapes social dining practices and explores employment conditions in the hospitality industry. With a PhD in hospitality management, Olivier brings industry experience as a former F&B manager to his academic work, offering practical insights into workforce dynamics and evolving guest experiences. His recent publications in top-tier (A*) journals contribute to understanding the intersection of hospitality and technology. He is an active educator, integrating research-led teaching into university preparation courses that develop students' critical thinking and analytical skills. His research-informed approach to education and his commitment to academic excellence have been recognised with various awards.

Dr. Tyler Riordan is a Postdoctoral Research Fellow in Strategic Management at the University of Queensland. In this role, he is working with government partners to monitor and evaluate post-disaster reconstruction incentivisation programs against physical, financial, social, and emotional dimensions of resilience. In his previous role, he co-authored the Queensland Tourism Workforce Crisis Resilience and Recovery Strategy. He holds a PhD in Hospitality and Anthropology and his thesis applied a lens of hospitality to migrants who deliver food in the platform economy. This culminated in the publication of the multilingual Humanising food delivery work in Australia toolkit which encourages multiple stakeholders to improve the sector. Tyler's broader research examines labour and workforces, with a focus on the ways disadvantaged communities navigate employment, training, and the digital platform ('gig') economy. Tyler has more than eight years' experience working in the hospitality industry.

Professor Richard N.S. Robinson joined Northumbria University in 2024, after 19 years at The University of Queensland, Australia, before which he enjoyed an 18-year career as a chef. Specialising in service work and employment, his projects have investigated the tourism, hospitality, leisure, transport, retail and welfare/social service sector contexts in the formal, gig and grey economies. His research has been funded by fellowships, competitive research grants, corporations, not-for-profits, industry peak bodies, government, and international agencies – and explores themes such as fair, safe and sustainable work, mental health and wellbeing, careers and vocations, and skills, training and development. Richard has led undergraduate and post-graduate courses in operations, management, critical studies and professional development. His teaching and learning expertise and scholarship are recognized by awards and advisory appointments at state, national and international levels. Richard currently holds a three-year Vice Chancellor Fellowship with Northumbria University

Dr. David Williamson is an Associate Professor in the School of Hospitality and Tourism, Auckland University of Technology. He spent 18 years working in the hospitality industry as a bar and hotel manager and restaurateur. His research focusses on employment and labour market issues in hospitality and tourism, using critical, qualitative, and some quantitative approaches. Other research interests include restaurant reviews, human resource management and media representations of hospitality and tourism work. His recent research with industry includes the 2024 report Hospitality and Tourism Employment: Rebound and Roads Forward for New Zealand's Ministry of Business, Innovation and Employment. In addition, David is one of the founding editors of Hospitality Insights, an online, open-source journal that is bridging the gap between academic and practitioner research dissemination, and he is a foundation member of the Global Hospitality Research Alliance. He has also held leadership roles at AUT including Programme Leader and Head of Department.
